In January 2005, Larry Summers, then president of Harvard University, gave a presentation at the Conference on Diversity in the Sciences held at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he accused women of being less inclined to excel in STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics) subjects.

\[ \text{Larry Summers' controversial statement} \]

...Larry Summers, then president of Harvard University, gave a presentation at the Conference on Diversity in the Sciences held at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he accused women of being less inclined to excel in STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics) subjects.

\[ \text{Larry Summers' statement} \]

...Larry Summers, then president of Harvard University, gave a presentation at the Conference on Diversity in the Sciences held at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he accused women of being less inclined to excel in STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics) subjects.

\[ \text{Larry Summers' controversial statement} \]

...Larry Summers, then president of Harvard University, gave a presentation at the Conference on Diversity in the Sciences held at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he accused women of being less inclined to excel in STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics) subjects.

\[ \text{Larry Summers' statement} \]

...Larry Summers, then president of Harvard University, gave a presentation at the Conference on Diversity in the Sciences held at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he accused women of being less inclined to excel in STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics) subjects.

\[ \text{Larry Summers' controversial statement} \]

...Larry Summers, then president of Harvard University, gave a presentation at the Conference on Diversity in the Sciences held at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he accused women of being less inclined to excel in STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics) subjects.

\[ \text{Larry Summers' statement} \]